Vivian Maier has been described as a New York-based street photographer, an immigrant who became a naturalized American citizen in 1965, who used a Pentax camera, and a nanny for wealthy Jewish families. She was born Vivian Maier in Chicago, Illinois, on August 21, 1924, to Italian immigrants. Her father had died from complications of alcoholism when she was four years old, leaving her mother to raise three children on her own. Maier was attracted to photography from an early age. Her mother, a good amateur photographer, provided her with a Pentax camera at age 12. In 1943, after her mother died, Maier moved to the Chicago area, where she worked as a nanny for wealthy Jewish families. Maier was working for the lawyer Jules Stein and his wife, Gertrude Stein, when she discovered the negatives she took in the 1930s. At that time, she was working at a studio for a living, and not on a family photo shoot. One of the clients she photographed at Stein's request was Bobby Short. By the early 1960s, Maier was working as a photographer's assistant for the New York studio at which her prints were processed, and she began photographing what she saw there. She produced her first published photographs in early 1961. Working mainly in her spare time, she is believed to have taken more than 100,000 photographs over a 50-year period. Although she used many different types of cameras, Maier was especially associated with a 40-millimetre Pentax Spotmatic camera and a 35mm Pentax Ektachrome Superchrome in her later years. Maier worked in an era before the availability of inexpensive photo equipment. She developed her photographs in a darkroom she set up in her home. Her negatives and undeveloped photographs are in the custody of the Chicago Cultural Center. She became a naturalized American citizen in 1965. A few days before she died, she married Peter Maier. Although she appeared in a few advertising images, most of Maier's photographs are unpublished. They were found among the millions of negatives she took in the 1950s and 1960s. Her work was picked up by the Italian paper La Nazione and then by the British Daily Mail, which published a collection of her photographs in 2010. Her images have been exhibited internationally. Photographer Vivian Maier was attracted to photography from an early age. Her mother, who was an amateur photographer, provided her with a Pentax camera at age 12. At age 15, Maier got her first job at a portrait studio. She later worked for Chicago socialite Jules Stein, taking photographs of clients such as singer Bobby Short. Maier said that she was a model for Stein, and was paid to dress up in different outfits and do various photographic projects.
